

I find it terrible that on Veteran's day a movie such as Saving Private Ryan cannot be shown uncut in fear of fines from the FCC. Many say the reason stations didn't show it was because of the Janet Jackson incident.

Well that's apples and oranges in my book. Watching a football game I don't expect to see naked breasts. Watching a war movie with plenty of fair warning the movie contains violence and language on Veterans' day is ok. The movie is contextual to the day, the content is contextual to the movie.

To let stations fear this showing means the FCC has let the American people down.
